A Two Column Research Article

Reading long documents on a phone is tiring when every page is a fixed rectangle designed for paper. The reader has to zoom, pan and scroll sideways, and loses the thread of the argument after a few pages.

A reflowing reader solves this by rebuilding the text: paragraphs are joined again, headings are recognised, and the words flow to whatever width the screen offers. The typography can then follow the reader instead of the printer.

Tables, figures and diagrams need special care. A table keeps its rows and columns, a diagram is kept as a picture, and captions stay next to the figure they describe.
